"Last year, we awarded scholarships to students from all over the world, who were recognized for their outstanding contributions to their academic fields of interest," said Mike Massaro, Flywire CEO. "We're proud to officially launch our third annual program and open up new possibilities for additional students. The continued interest in these scholarships underscores the mission of our Foundation to help bridge the access and affordability gap in international education."

In response to increased demand, Flywire is also expanding its program this year by adding a new category, specifically focused on environmental sustainability. This scholarship is designed for students who are developing innovative solutions to fight climate change and other negative impacts to the planet.

"At Flywire, environmental sustainability is a core pillar of our overall Environmental, Social, and Governance (ESG) strategy and we continue to deepen our focus on the issue," continued Massaro. "As a broader society, we're just scratching the surface of the innovation required to sustain a healthy planet. By offering a new scholarship dedicated to environmental sustainability, we aim to empower the next generation of students with resources to research and develop solutions that help reverse the effects of climate change and create a safer planet for all of us."

The Flywire Charitable Foundation 2022 scholarships are available to students studying in the following academic fields:

- Social Justice

As social justice issues, including but not limited to anti-LGBTQ+ legislation, religious persecution, sexism, racism and sexual violence, continue to dominate the world news, the need for significant social justice reform has only increased.
